As a Supermarket is a large scale retail organization, it gets many economies of large scale operations. Disadvantages of Supermarkets Some of the disadvantages of Supermarkets may be explained as under: 1. Need for Huge Amount of Capital As Supermarket is a large scale retail organization and it deals in almost all the goods and services of daily use of consumers, it needs huge amount of capital to be invested. 2. Problem of Required Space Supermarket required a large space and that too in the heart of big cities, but it is very difficult to find such a place in a big city these days. 3. Difficult for Customers in Making Selections No salesman is appointed in the supermarket, and thus, the customers have to select on their own. It becomes very difficult for customers to do so without any aid. 4. Not Suitable for the Sales of Goods of Technical Nature For supermarkets, is not very practical to provide after-sale services. Therefore, goods of Technical nature cannot be sold in supermarkets. 5. Possibility of Spoil of Perishable Goods As Supermarket deals in many perishable goods like vegetables, fruits, dairy products, etc. These goods may be sold within a limited time. 6. Lack of the Facility of Credit The supermarket sells goods only for cash. Thus, the customers want to purchase on credit, cannot do so from supermarkets. 7. Fewer Opportunities for Employment As no salesman are appointed in supermarkets, least employment opportunities are provided by these markets. 8. Minimum Satisfaction of Consumers

                    Long lines, parking difficulties, crowded spaces, time-consuming, everyone knows the hassles of doing groceries at the store. These are therefore the top reasons for customers to do online grocery shopping (Reitsma, 2010). France, Switzerland, the United Kingdom and the United State are the biggest online grocery markets, with full range online retailers (Warschun, et al., 2012). The U.K. is the most developed market, with around 20% of the households doing online grocery shopping (IGD, 2013). Amazon is the leading company on the e-grocery market (Rudarakanchana, 2014). With the launch of AmazonFresh in San Francisco it is extending its online grocery shopping branch (Somerville, 2013), but encounters serious competition from established grocery stores like Wal-Mart in the U.S. and Tesco in the U.K. (Moskowitz, 2014).

                 Online grocery shopping is not something that can be offered by every grocery store around the corner, it requires high investments and logistics infrastructures (Hays, Keskinocak, López, 2004). Many supermarkets do see the customer need for convenience and therefore provide a more digital environment in store. Ranging from self-service check outs to smart shopping charts with real time feedback on promotions, recommended complementary products, sharing recipes and allowing to skip the checkout lane (van Ittersum, et al.
                    2013, Menezes & Usmani, 2010). Although there is supply and demand for online grocery shopping, only 3,3% of global supermarkets sales of $ 60.000,- billion (FMI, 2012) is coming from e-grocery, expected 4% by the end of 2014 (Hamstra, 2013). Main reasons for the little use of online grocery shopping can be found in trust, costs and habits.

Trust Especially for fresh products, customers lack trust in employees' choice and product quality without seeing it themselves (Galant, López & Monroe, 2013, pp 23). "Putting trust into the hands of robots and employees who aren't necessarily as observant isn't easy. While Amazon does let you choose between "ripe" and "not ripe" avocados, everything else is a gamble." (Vaknin, 2013). Cost Lower cost is one of the main reasons for customers to shop online. Due to the low margins on groceries, extra cost like; minimum amount of spending and delivery cost are charged for online grocery shopping. This has a negative influence on the customers' decision to do online grocery shopping (Hays, Keskinocak, López, 2004).

Habit Despite of the hassles experienced during grocery shopping in store, customers are used to this environment and it is part of their weekly routine and has become ritualised. Breaking with these habits, emotionally and physically, is something that takes time (Hartman Group, 2013). "Most customers were not ready to change their shopping habits, and even if they were, they preferred to buy from existing stores selling online, which they found familiar and more reliable." (Galant, López & Monroe, 2013, pp 31).
